

Dear members of the Regional Wildland Fire Networks and associated experts:

This 15th issue of the Global Wildland Fire Network Bulletin is providing the final draft of the Third Annual Global Wildland Fire Fatalities Report covering the year 2010. This report is based on the evaluation of media (newspaper, radio broadcasts and TV) published on the internet, as well as agency reports from throughout the world.

GFMC has received several responses to the draft First Annual Global Wildland Fire Fatalities Report (covering 2008). One recipient of the report suggested not to include shack fires in informal settlements in South Africa, or fatalities of car accidents caused by wildland fire smoke. GFMC is taking the opportunity to clarify: This report includes all death and injuries of firefighters and civilians related one way or the other to wildfires, i.e. accidents during firefighting, accidents on the way to respond to a fire, wildfires affecting people in wildlands or structures ignited by wildfires, or other indirect accidents (e.g., by smoke-reduced visibility, or people admitted to hospitals, medical treatment or deceased due to wildland fire smoke inhalation).

Since only a fraction of wildfire-related accidents may be reported through media and subsequently published on the web, we presume that our attempt to compile a global statistical database is still very incomplete and may scratch the surface only. Unlike the World Almanac and other databases such as the International Disaster Database of the Centre for Research on the Epidemiology of Disasters (CRED)¹, GFMC aims at identifying all individual incidents that have been reported. At the end of this report weblinks are provided to a number of publications / reports.

The short incident notes (by country, in alphabetic order) are taken from the detailed reports that have been published by GFMC between January and December 2010 (<http://www.fire.uni-freiburg.de/media/news.htm>). Links to the detailed reports are provided. Note: Due to some copyright restrictions the GFMC database cannot be published freely accessible on the GFMC website. However, institutions or individuals interested to work with GFMC in the scientific evaluation of data may request password-protected access.

The 2010 report shows that 279 people were killed worldwide due to wildland fires and 140 more were injured. These figures are down from the previous year with 374 fatalities and 160 injuries recorded in 2009 (IFFN-GFMC UNISDR Global Wildland Fire Network Bulletin No. 14). However, the severe fire and smoke pollution episode in the Russian Federation in July-August 2010 did not only result in 60 fatalities directly attributed to the fires, but also to many thousands more 'premature deaths' related to extremely high temperatures and air pollution generated by wildfire smoke. According to official government sources about 56,000 more people died in Russia in July-August 2010 as compared to

¹ www.cred.be - Note: the CRED defines a disaster as "a situation or event which overwhelms local capacity, necessitating a request to a national or international level for external assistance; an unforeseen and often sudden event that causes great damage, destruction and human suffering". For a disaster to be entered into the database, at least one of the following criteria must be fulfilled:

- 10 or more people reported killed
- 100 or more people reported affected
- declaration of a state of emergency
- call for international assistance

The GFMC does not follow these criteria as fatalities or injuries caused by wildfires are usually below these thresholds, and the high number of incidents would otherwise not be recorded at all. The 2009 2010 reports by CRED does not provide explicit data on wildfire-related incidents.

International Forest Fire News (IFFN) is an activity of the UNECE/FAO Team of Specialists on Forest Fire and the Global Fire Monitoring Center (GFMC). IFFN is published on behalf of UNECE Timber Committee and the FAO European Forestry Commission and is serving the UN-ISDR Global Wildland Fire Network (GWFN). Since June 2005 the IFFN/ GFMC Bulletin is providing short news and global fire update information to members of Regional Wildland Fire Networks and partners. the two months in 2009. In August 2010 Moscow's Health Department reported deaths had nearly doubled in the city to about 700 a day.

In Asia, 67 people were killed by fire, notably in China. Israel also suffered the highest number of fire-related deaths in years, with 44 persons perished in the Mt Carmel fire. In Africa, which is particularly under-represented in media reporting, 52 fatalities were recorded, including 21 in Zimbabwe. In the United States 36 people were killed and 44 injured. The figures also reflect a high proportion of children killed in fires, particularly in countries such as Nepal, Pakistan, South Africa and Zimbabwe.

In order to complete this report the members and associated experts of the Regional Wildland Fire Networks as well as other recipients of this Bulletin are kindly asked to review their home databases and media reports and return data and / or reports back to the GFMC (fire@fire.uni-freiburg.de). All reports should provide a source that could be quoted in the final version of the Second Annual Global Wildland Fire Fatalities Report. Russian Federation: Total – 60 plus 56,800 killed:

Russia's death rate rose by more than a quarter during August's heat wave and forest fire crisis, official data show. According to the state statistics office, 41,262 more people died than during the same month of 2009. The highest rise in mortality was recorded in Moscow and other regions badly affected by the heat such as Samara and Voronezh. The data published on the state statistics office's website show that 191,951 people died across Russia in August 2010, compared to 150,689 in August 2009. In the city of Moscow, 15,016 people died compared to 8,905 the previous year. Russian demographer Sergei Zakharov told the BBC's Russian service that no data was available on causes of death but he accepted that "the intense heat and smog [from burning peat bogs] could have led to a rise in the death rate" (08 October 2010, <http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/world-europe-11503550>).

Nearly 56,000 more people died in July and August compared with the previous summer, the Economic Development Ministry said in a monthly report on Russia's economy released this week. "In connection with the unusual heat, forest fires and smoke, 14,500 more people died in July this year and 41,300 more people died in August than during the same period last year," said the report's section about demographics. Deaths from digestive and circulatory system diseases as well as from cancer increased, the report said. About 374,000 Russians died in July and August, up 17.5 percent from 2009, the report said. In August alone, about 192,000 died, up more than 27 percent from August 2009. In August, Moscow's health department chief said deaths had nearly doubled in the city to about 700 a day. There were fewer than 60 official deaths nationwide from the wildfires themselves (27 October 2010, http://www.fire.uni-freiburg.de/media/2010/10/news_20101027_ru.htm).

Alexander Chupriyan, Deputy Minister, EMERCOM of Russia reported 9 villages burned out, 2,000 houses and facilities damaged and 53 persons killed in the first days of the fire. (10 May 2011, http://www.preventionweb.net/files/globalplatform/entry_presentation~russianaturalfires2010%5B1%5D.pdf)
