German experts fly in to tackle forest blaze

ADDIS ABABA - A team of German firefighters flew to southern Ethiopia Friday in an attempt to tackle two bushfires that have destroyed tens of thousands of hectares of virgin forest, state radio reported.

The experts, who will fly over the fires before deciding on how to bring them under control, were the first to respond to Ethiopia's appeal for international help.

One fire in the Bale region has already destroyed more than 40,000 acres of virgin forest and natural coffee forest, and is now approaching an important national park in southern Ethiopia, home to several of the world's rarest mammal species.

The 1,500-square-mile Bale Mountains Park is home to half of the 400 Simien foxes in the world, as well as two other species found only in the Horn of Africa country-the Mountain Nyala and Menelik's Bushbuck.

"The fire has already approached the vicinity of the park and could engulf the whole mountain unless steps are taken to stop it," Tesfaye Hundesa, manager of Ethiopia's Wildlife Conservation Department, said.

Another fire fanned by gusty winds in the nearby Borena region along the Kenyan border has destroyed more than 57,000 acres of forest.

More than 150 people have been arrested on suspicion of starting the fires, which have followed two years of drought in the southern part of the country.

A team of South African firefighters is also expected in Ethiopia in the next few days. (Reuter)

In a related news, the fire that has been raging in Odo Shakkiso, Bore, Uruga and Adola woredas of Borena zone has so far consumed 30,000 hectares of forests, the head of the zonal agricultural department Ato Teffera Wolde Medhin said. The fire has been gaining in intensity despite the efforts of over 2,000 residents to extinguish the fire. Ato Teffera expressed fears that the fire, if not contained in time, may encroach on neighbouring states.

In yet another fire news, the fire that erupted at a place called Yuga in Kersa woreda of East Hararghie zone last February 28 is still raging. Two children were killed by the raging fire, according to Corporal Seyoum Degefa, head of the public relations office of the zonal police said.
